Joggins - Wen'jue'katik

Pjila'si to Joggins, River Hebert & area! Wen'jue'katik, was valued by the Mi'kmaq for its rich tidal waters and coastal resources. Coal mining began in the 1600's and grew through the 19th century, supported by shipbuilding, fishing, and the railway. Today, the community is best known for its UNESCO-designated fossil cliffs, standing as a place where culture, science, and coastal life meet.

River Hebert - Wo'qn

Named after the Hebert River, this resilient village was once the beating heart of Cumberland County's coal mining industry. River Hebert thrived in the late 1800s and early 1900s, its fortunes tied to the coal seams that ran beneath it. Today, the community honors that legacy at the River Hebert Miners Museum and the Heritage Models Museum, where visitors can explore handcrafted miniatures of historical buildings and scenes that tell the story of local industry and everyday life.

Minudie - Mun'tek

Minudie Day is a cherished annual celebration that brings this quiet, historic community to life with music, food, and heartfelt gatherings. Held each summer in August, the event welcomes visitors and former residents alike to reconnect with Minudie's rich Acadian and settler heritage. Highlights include traditional meals, local entertainment, historical displays, and guided tours of landmarks like St. Denis Church and the Amos Seaman School Museum. It's a joyful opportunity to experience small-town pride, community spirit, and living history.

Joggins Fossil Cliffs

A UNESCO World Heritage Site, the Joggins Fossil Cliffs reveal a 300-million-year-old record of life from the Coal Age. Often called the "Coal Age Galápagos," this site features fossilized trees, footprints, and early reptiles preserved in the cliffs. The Joggins Fossil Centre offers engaging exhibits and guided tours that bring this prehistoric world to life. A cafe and visitor information is located inside the centre.

! The rising tide can flood parts of some tidal flats and sand bars faster than you can run. A general rule of thumb is to return to your vehicle three hours before the next highest tide or to time your visit during falling tide.
